

Latent Prints

Name _____

1. _____ are impressions left by friction ridge skin on a surface, such as a tool handle, glass, door, etc.
2. Prints may be collected by revealing them with a dusting of _____ and then lifted with a piece of _____.
3. What is the most common type of animal hair that is used to make brushes? _____
4. Some investigators use _____ powder and UV lights to help them find latent prints on multi-colored or dark surfaces.
5. _____ powder can also be used to reveal latent prints. This type of powder works better on _____ surfaces or _____ baggies and containers.
6. The _____ fuming method (often called the super glue method) is a procedure that is used to develop latent fingerprints on a variety of objects.
7. Watch the video to answer these questions.
During fuming the super glue heats up and attaches to the _____ in the fingerprint.
The evidence is placed in a super glue _____ to develop the prints.
8. _____ is a chemical that bonds with the amino acids in fingerprints and will produce a _____ or _____ color. It is used to lift prints from surfaces such as paper and cardboard.

Follow your teacher's directions to lift your fingerprint and tape it in the space below.

My Latent Print

